Neha Agnihotri is from Fort Wayne, Indiana and plans to graduate in 2021 from the Honors College with a B.S degree in Public Health. She first became interested in women’s health research as a junior in high school when she began an independent research paper about internal and external factors contributing to preterm birth. She followed up her research by completing internships with neonatologists and OB-GYNs. She hopes to go to medical school after her time at College of Charleston.